Internal Audit

12

The existing business and corporate environment has conclusively proved that the Internal Audit function has attained much more significance than the conventional transaction-based role of the past. In order to survive in a technology-driven society, business entities must be responsive in order to achieve targets in identifying opportunities, managing risks and exposures that can determine success or failure.

This practice segment provides services in enhancing the scope and approach of the existing internal audit function of clients by providing advice, re-engineering and coordinating the internal audit department. We provide a tailored strategic approach to help our clients identify and understand specific operational and financial risks; to define the level of risk the client is willing to accept; and to identify and focus on the opportunities available.

Our approach relating to Internal Audit is based on the guidelines specifically developed by Baker Tilly as a separate practice segment. It is a risk based approach that focuses on organizations' objectives and impediments to achieving those objectives .

Forensic Audit & Investigations

At Baker Tilly, we recognize the complex and sensitive nature of investigations, which is why our experience is valuable when we are asked to provide efficient, accurate and robust accounting assistance to our regulatory clients.

Your reputation – with your customers and employees, the public, regulators and other companies is what keeps you in business and underpins your success. But reputation can be lost with terrifying speed such as hackers stealing your data, a competitor accusing your sales force of corruption, a dispute with your business partner threatening to erode value, an accounting discrepancy undermining market confidence and etc, the risks you face are unending and continue to change. There is a need to act swiftly when fraud is suspected in order to prevent the situation deteriorating and to provide the very best opportunity for recovering any losses that have already occurred. We recognize that simply reporting suspicions of fraud straight away may not be the only solution. It is important to understand that primary interest of the regulatory bodies is not only to recover stolen assets but to secure a successful prosecution – even then they may not proceed until you provide them with a comprehensive evidence file.

Other Advisory Services

Succession Planning

Statistical data across the world has shown that 96% of all businesses start as family businesses, but only 30% make it to the second generation, falling to 12% and 3% over the next two generations. While the reasons for this are multiple, a major one is that even successful family businesses become large, cumbersome, complex and difficult to manage over the years. For family-owned companies to maintain vibrant progress across generations, they need to manage the inherent divergence between family and business on a regular basis. In order to do so, they need to align their strategies across three overlapping and important areas, namely the business, ownership and the family.

This is something that is difficult to manage independently, and it is for this reason that a number of the leading businesses in this sphere have felt the need to turn to professional family business advisors. Over the years the family advisory profession has discovered areas within the family business arena which need their expertise such as the governance models that define the roles of family and non-family executives, the distinction between personal and business investments, succession planning, leadership transition etc.

We have the leading experts in this kind of advisory work on our team, and are devoted to structuring the client's business affairs in the most erudite and professional manner. Our priority is ensuring that the wealth and lifestyles of the current generation of family owners and beyond grows in line with the growth in the number of family members. Our end product which is arrived at after detailed discussions and meetings with all key stakeholders in the family enterprise system is a tailor-made solution that ensures family survival over generations and helps to avoid conflicts in future.

Out Sourcing

Innovation in cost-effective business growth has given birth to a new form of consulting commonly termed as outsourcing. As the name suggests, outsourcing enables management of enterprises, irrespective of their sizes, to concentrate and apply their energies on the areas of activities considered as their core activities while entrusting non-core functions to an external service provider.

This modern management technique, by utilizing the concept of cost and benefit analysis, has successfully drawn a line distinguishing overall business activities into two segments on the basis of significance and sensitivity. Excellence in execution and speed is the life of the modern business prompting the outsource of non-core activities in order to allow management to focus on planning, effective operation and ultimately achieving targets of success and profitability.

The firm is well equipped to handle outsourced services ranging from handling and managing accounting and finance functions, book keeping, managing payment functions, internal audit, processing of voluminous transactions, allocation of trained and qualified staff for carrying out specific assignments under the control and supervision of management, handling corporate and tax law compliance with respect to periodical submissions of various statements prescribed therein.
